Phytate phosphohydrolases activity in colon cells of pigs selected for high and low digestibility of native maize starch. The activity of phytate phosphohydrolases (PPH) in duodenal, jejunal, ileal, and rectal cells of pigs selected for high or low digestibility of native maize starch has been studied. Pigs selected for high and low digestibility of native starch are carriers of glucose transporters (GLUT2) modified by mutation of the gene responsible for these transporters. During digesta passage, glucose transporters GLUT2 allow the transfer of glucose in enterocytes, which induces malabsorption of phosphorus. In the present study, the authors studied the phytate phosphohydrolase (PPH) activity which could contribute to decreasing this malabsorption. The results showed the presence of PPH in duodenal, jejunal, and ileal cells, but not in rectal cells, of pigs of both groups. There was no difference in the PPH activity between the two groups of pigs. The ANC is going to behave like the ANC." "The EFF will be meeting with the ANC in the city this coming Tuesday to give our point of view. We do not agree with the ANC report. You can tell them that the EFF is a democratic movement," said Malema. National Spokesperson, Mosiuoa Lekota confirmed that the party is aware of the meeting that Malema and the EFF are planning. "Yes, yes, the EFF is aware of the meeting that is happening now," said Lekota. Lekota added that they are aware of the implications of a possible meeting between
