I'm wondering if there's some step in the s7 process where you can "start over" and examine each of the last inputs you've sent. You would definitely want to inspect the data using disassembly, or perhaps a simple logic probe and a PC speaker? The OP is looking for any issues that would be OS/firmware dependent. I have a s7 too...this happened to me once. It was when I messed with the TP-LINK's driver (a modified driver). It was the time when I stopped using the original "gps-sensor" driver (It's only for gps). I had a dongle from TP-LINK and then I used the idler. I had TP-LINK TA-2020 with idler and I don't remember anything when I tried to get the signal from receiver. As always, I (as a software developer) checked the program's log (I had to use about 1 hour to find it) and I found this: I didn't understand the reason of that error but I checked again and again the app's log...and I found that I had an error in the input module which is connected to the idler. So the truth is there was no
