Presidential hand-washing rates remain low, report finds WASHINGTON — When President Trump and first lady Melania Trump enter the White House, they will be greeted by a sign with a bright red hand gazette and a neon green hand-washing reminder. The same hand-washing reminder will be visible on every door of the White House, and should remind them to use hand sanitizer before shaking hands with guests at the White House. The first lady has said she believes they should only use hand sanitizer. The hand-washing sign — issued by the National Park Service — did not cause as much of a stir when it was first announced. Some saw it as a waste of money, while others viewed it as a useful reminder to the president and first lady to wash their hands after shaking hands with guests, and before any other transactions. The Trump administration's hand-washing rates are similar to those of presidents Barack Obama, George W. Bush and Bill Clinton before, said Gary Cutter, director of the White House Mess Division for the Eisenhower Executive Office Building. "It's about the same. I don't think we're doing any better or worse than the presidents before. Our hand-washing policy remains unchanged," Cutter told NBC News. Hand-washing rates for Trump, Obama, Bush and Clinton before the White House were 60 percent, 49 percent, 49 percent and 56 percent, respectively. In a report released on Thursday by the Associated Press and the The Washington Post, hand-washing rates for Trump, Obama, Bush and Clinton were 69 percent, 69 percent, 67 percent and 53 percent, respectively. "The numbers speak for themselves, and show that during all four years of this administration, President Trump and first lady Melania Trump have been observed washing their hands at levels similar to their immediate predecessors,
