Computed tomography of the tooth-supporting mucous membrane. Computed tomography (CT) was performed in 10 healthy human volunteers. Within a 3-mm or 5-mm interval starting from the incisal or occlusal plane, three planes were investigated: the gingival, dental and buccal root surfaces of the first and second molars. The subjects were scanned under standardized conditions (22.5 cm supine position and 110 cm H₂O pressure). Dentition, mucous membranes and other structures (e.g. tongue, tonsils, bony palate, pharynx) were excluded from the analysis. The thinning and decalcification of the mucous membranes was more pronounced in the dental than in the gingival mucosa. With increasing age a slight increase in thickness was observed in the mid-facial gingiva. Thickening of the mucous membranes on the dental root surfaces was more pronounced than on the buccal root surfaces. On the occlusal plane a bulge of the alveolar mucosa could be demonstrated in the central part of the left first molar. In an area of the incisal gingiva of the palate, an intraoral defect was located, possibly originating from a parafunctional activity. Neither resorption nor other known defects were found.

Connect with Us Getting the Justice Back into Justice One of the most coveted titles held by a Mount Vernon School District lawyer is "Advocate." The title is earned through a combination of hard work and focus. But sometimes, the simple act of walking through the courtroom door as a member of the justice system can be perplexing to some, even shocking to others. It happened to Karen Loewen. She was 17 years old when she was asked to appear before a judge at Prince of Peace Family Court. When the case was called, Loewen was told to wait in the hall. She waited for a good three hours. "I sat there and I kept thinking, 'What am I doing here? I don't know the law,'" she said. "I felt bad, but I had to do this. I had to be here." Finally, she was called in to see a judge and a woman she later learned was a social worker. The social worker assigned to Loewen's case was Sally Taugher, who has been assigned to Mount Vernon for the past seven years.

Loewen told Taugher that she was worried about some comments she had heard on the street. She also had concerns about going out to parties. "It scared me," Loewen said. In early January of last year, Loewen was given a choice. The issue was whether or not Loewen would continue the on-again, off-again relationship with another teen. The girl who was Loewen's boyfriend was a student at Mount Vernon, an honor student and a superstar wrestler.

Loewen went to court to let the judge know she wanted the teenager to finish high school. She was told she would have to stop seeing the boy. "She was heartbroken," Taugher said.

Loewen knew the girl was getting along well with her parents, so she tried to persuade the judge that the boy was not capable of being a part of her life, even if she was allowed to keep in contact. "She felt she needed to make sure the boy had somewhere to go to school," Taugher said. "It was the father's issue that he wanted to give his daughter a better life, and he didn't want to do that if he couldn't get her to school." Loewen said the judge told her it was her choice
