SQLDoc Sharp

SQLDoc Sharp is a FREE tool for generating text that converts the SQL Server2005and SQL Server 2008 documentation of your database to the Free help topic format. It allows you to create modules and components, and connect them to code behind the scenes. It's a free tool that will make your life easier. SQLDoc Sharp is free for use on a per server, per license basis. The typical SQL Server database has several thousand to tens of thousands of stored procedures, functions, views, and triggers. This can become tedious to discover all of those objects, as well as the corresponding help files, to determine what information they contain. SQLDoc Sharp will show the contents of database stored procedures and objects for free, and generate the associated documentation in a help topic format for you. Generate a single module, or generate an entire database for you. You can easily perform this task to generate the documentation for any SQL Server 2005 and SQL Server 2008 database. Work with the modules that you create. Also, change their visibility to protected, internal, public, private, and internal parameterized. You can also add the modules to a specific project, as well as a database. You can also add comments to the module content. If you want to move your code behind the scenes, you can use the 'CodeBehind' attribute. This attribute specifies that the tool will automatically create a C# code file for you that is located behind the module code. You can also add a code file to the module, to access it when performing operations that require the code. By specifying the required.NET version, the tool will automatically upgrade the module for you. If the code you are adding contains new methods, the tool will automatically generate the documentation for these methods as well. Generate documentation for individual stored procedures. The tool will show you which database objects are used in the stored procedure, and what their uses are. It will even show you the return parameter lists for each. You can select a single stored procedure or select multiple stored procedures, and this will build the documentation for all of them. The tool will show you the connection information for each stored procedure, or you can choose to generate connection information for them all. Choose to set the execution strategy, and it will generate a batch execution plan for you. You can also generate support for the'sys.dm_exec_cached_plans' procedure that you can use to show and manipulate plans. You can generate plan caching information for the module, and a stored plan cache file that can be used
