(PS3, Xbox 360).Q: Newline character when using Printf In my particular case I'm printing floating point numbers and want to add a new line after every set of 3. I've tried using the following: printf("%g"); but this is only printing the number. How can I get it to print a new line every 3 characters? A: You have to supply the width of the output field: printf("%.3g ", numbers[i]); The other common format specifier %f works similarly, e.g.: printf("%.3f ", numbers[i]); When your output field is bigger than 3, you should just add the and call printf again: printf("%.3f", numbers[i]); The %g specifier in this case is identical to %f and is intended for negative numbers, so it doesn't have any size constraints. Time-resolved scanning laser Doppler flowmetry measurements of blood flow to the human placenta at both normal and elevated fetal oxygen tensions. We have used time-resolved scanning laser Doppler flowmetry (SDF) to investigate placental blood flow in two groups of women at term (36-41 wk gestation): one group of women in whom the fetus was in utero at normal fetal oxygen tension (FOT, Q: Duplicate entry for key
