Quentin Tarantino's Once Upon a Time in Hollywood stars Leonardo DiCaprio and Margot Robbie as fading stars living in Los Angeles. Ambitious actor Rick Dalton (DiCaprio) has been living a quiet life after his career died down, but after his best friend Sharon Tate (Robbie) is killed, he decides to make a comeback. His comeback leads him to a meeting with aging film director Roman Polanski (Damian Lewis) at a house party where they find themselves pulled into the final days of Hollywood and the Manson murders. This summer marks the 50th anniversary of the infamous Charles Manson and his clan's Tate-LaBianca murders, the most notorious crime in California history. Once Upon a Time in Hollywood represents the first film to fully embrace this moment in time, and an early screening at Cannes this summer helped generate a lot of interest in the film. But it still largely flew under the radar until now. Our man David Ehrlich did a write-up for MovieExclusive.com which you can read here. Our TV of the Week is Netflix's Altered Carbon. This concept series was adapted from Richard K. Morgan's sci-fi book and revolves around an android that stumbles into a new body on Earth with the entire world's past computer programs. It's an intriguing concept which works better when you get to see how it all comes together. It's currently streaming on Netflix. What did you think about our Movie and TV picks? Let us know in the comments below! Stay tuned to Collider throughout the week for more coverage of Summer Blockbuster season as it continues! The ear and the brain. As our knowledge of the human brain improves, we are finding that the ear plays a crucial role in the development and function of the human nervous system. The ear is essential for hearing and many other tasks. The interactions between auditory information and the brain's language and non-language functions continue to be investigated. The knowledge gained from
