I am hoping that there is a way of doing this using less for loop & a one liner without converting back to array. A: The json_encode function is the way to go for you here. Here's a fully working example. "yes", "payment_complete"=>"yes", "payment_in_progress"=>"no"); echo json_encode($array1); Output: {"accepted":"yes","payment_complete":"yes","payment_in_progress":"no"} other countries, but we won't know that until there are enough of them around to compare statistics (so that any such bias can be ruled out). Because of this, my non-countries will be given a weighting based on how many have been picked. Thanks for all the warm welcome from the UK members too, and to everyone else for following along with the series from home. A particular big welcome goes to those who were already signed up for the team before they started (that's you, left off list!), and people like Will who are starting their first proper migration with big-time advice to follow.
