The program was written specifically to ensure compatibility with the features and technology of Google, as well as Apple and Microsoft. The company uses the open-source movement as the main goal. The content of the program can be distributed using a number of conventional ways: by re-posting the content on a personal site, by posting it on a large distribution website, by sharing it with friends and inviting friends to share it or simply by distributing it on social networks. Each distribution platform has its own limitations. For example, if you wish to take advantage of a system that allows you to find your favorite websites more easily, you can simply use a bookmarking service, such as Google Bookmarks or Yahoo Bookmarks, as well as other services. The new software is based on the XML format and therefore allows a significant reduction in bandwidth. With a number of browser add-ons available for popular browsers, the distribution and editing of content is made much easier and more efficient. The program supports the connection of any number of users and any number of machine, and the data can be presented in different formats: HTML, XHTML, MHT, OHT and CSS (Cascading Style Sheets).
