in a large sandbox environment. Many currently used surface mailings require the sender to print and mail an envelope containing postage and a signature-forming machine-imprinted image along with his original letter or document. When the envelope is delivered to the United States Postal Service, a mail clerk creates an address label which includes the printed design and stamps the envelope for delivery. This method is slow, expensive, and the envelopes are relatively large. Some offices which provide business communication services may also provide postage stamps, signature-forming equipment, and special address labels and forms for free or a low price. This frees the sender from having to print or purchase a large number of envelopes or labels, etc.

Some offer standard postage with raised lettering for first class postage and flat lettering for second class postage. See also Mailer's stamp. Postal rates and service changes.
