This study developed a guide for nurse-written prescriptions and gave it to nurses working in the acute care section of a hospital. The objectives were to analyse the data collected after implementing this guide and to determine the degree of use of the guide. The guide had seven sections and included two illustrations, one of which was a human body diagram. Each day, one to three nurses received a standardised prescription to fill out during their working shift. At the end of the shift, the prescription was collected from the corresponding nursing shift supervisor. The prescription guidelines (in Italian) were completed by 123 nurses, of whom 61 (50.4%) were pharmacists and 62 (49.6%) were not. Corrected prescriptions were completed by 57 (46.3%) of the 123 nurses. The results show a very low degree of use of the guide. However, nurses who have received training in writing prescriptions and in the use of the guide reported the highest use of the guide.OCTOBER 11, 1945 NEW YORK, Wednesday—He feels that air-raid wardens and firemen have really done their part in this country in the war against Germany. And the bomb that was dropped on Hiroshima has not put him back one iota in his belief in the superiority of the good god over the bad god. "Here in New York," he said, "there is an estimated 6,000,000 people, a city of half a million. If one bomb could kill so many and if the Japanese only had such a plane to drop such a bomb, there is no sense in talking about the use of such a weapon. Only an insane country would do it. Let us think of saving these people by other methods." "As a matter of fact," Mr.

■"When I was a boy, I always wanted to be an explorer. But that was impossible. Explorers are always unlucky. You were sent to boarding school and then the First World War came. That's when I knew how important it was to stick at things and find out what was under every rock. The next thing I knew, I was in West Africa, climbing trees and scaling cliffs in search of King Soliman's gold." The Windows 7 Theme looks great with Vista themes and is optimised for Windows 7 Desktop. The control of an automatically operated mechatronic device such as a machine tool, an industrial robot or an industrial robot, is made by way of a control panel equipped with pushbuttons. FIG. 4 shows a prior art control panel for an automatic machine tool, in which a control device M comprising a microprocessor is connected by way of electrical cables W to a key matrix P (keypad) and to a display device D. Such an arrangement is unworkable for a number of reasons. First of all, a large number of electrical cables have to be connected to the control panel. A large number of electrical cables is a disadvantage for the control panel, since the electrical cables must be connected to the control panel according to various criteria. For example, for each actuator of the machine tool, there must be a cable connecting the cable matrix to the control panel and a cable for the display screen. Moreover, the cables have to be arranged in a particular spatial manner in the control panel so that the cables do not disrupt the rest of the arrangement of the control panel, for example if the control panel is made as a panel mounting the cable matrixes and the display device. Secondly, in control panels of this type, it is only possible to monitor a display device at a fixed display position, for example at a monitor placed in the control panel. In a mechatronic system having a microprocessor in the control device, it is thus not possible to have a plurality of display devices, or to connect the display devices to different control positions or areas of the control panel. Moreover, it is only possible to monitor the control device at this fixed display
