What am I doing wrong? A: The problem is that your MailClient is not instantiated (what happens is that you call new MailClient()). And the default constructor of MailClient doesn't require a port: public MailClient() { this(null, null, "smtp", "465", "ssl"); } You need to instantiate your MailClient, like this: MailClient m = new MailClient(smtp.getHost(), smtp.getPort(), null, null, "smtp", "465", "ssl"); If your port is not null and not set to zero, the constructor is trying to get the port from the OS - in your case, that probably returns a non-zero value, so it's saying you can't use a non-zero port. A: public MailClient() {
