International road racing sports car series German manufacturer Porsche will introduce its first electric sports car in the upcoming years, according to Deutsche Land Rover Mercedes-Benz, or Daimler as it's often known as. And it is on April Fools' Day that this article was initially sent out, as we can only publish a joke on April 1. The concept sports car, the Monster, shall be equipped with a powerful battery, which will guarantee a driving range of at least 500 kilometers and the target price is around US$ 50,000. It is expected to be introduced in 2017, and will be the second lightweight sports car designed by Porsche. The much more affordable, 918 that will be introduced in 2014. The DM designer of the small lightweight vehicle is Marko Lidholt, who is known for his works on electric cars and is a long-time employee of Porsche. Existing Seat Maritima, a Spanish specialised in cars Seat, Volkswagen and Skoda, has been tasked to develop the vehicles. It will compete in the 24 Hours of

In a standout show, she showcases "how little girls can be stylish." The perfect complement to a walk through the runways, Rudolph shows off a little more of her style in other ways: She wears metallic green nail polish, denim, a camo print top and a plaid shirt to meet celebrities backstage and interview them during the course of the evening. Public health strategy A public health strategy is an integrated set of activities, materials, methods, and partnerships that addresses determinants of health and helps achieve the objectives of a public health system. Strategies are developed by various health care providers and governmental agencies and seek to address the public's or specific populations' health needs. Sometimes a strategy is not developed by the target audience and the key stakeholders are government agencies. The National Strategy for Public Health, developed in 1989 by a group of university deans and administrators, was an important event in the evolution of public health. The strategy defined public health as addressing the health of a population and placing emphasis on health in all policy decisions, while not omitting the health of individuals.

Public health problems are considered as "determinants of health" which includes individual choices and behaviors and environmental conditions. This is an adaptation of health determinant theory popularized in Canada by Clyde Prestowitz. Modern Public Health Strategies The Government of Canada developed a comprehensive, long term public health strategy in 2006 to promote and protect Canadians' health and well being, which responds to an updated version of the National
