These can get you started with Photoshop Elements. 1. EPUB If you open Photoshop Elements, you'll see a window. This window is where you start editing images in Photoshop Elements. To use Photoshop Elements, you need to have files that you want to edit in Photoshop Elements. You start by opening a new document. The document is where you can edit your images. It will be named after your username. Photoshop Elements uses.psd files, so the file format is.psd (Photoshop document). Now, you have to decide if you want to edit the original file or if you want to make a copy of the file. The options are 'Create a copy of the file' and 'Create a new document'. If you decide to create a copy 05a79cecff

Q: Accessing protected member variables Possible Duplicate: protected member variables in public class Why can't I access a protected member variable in a derived class constructor? I am confused by the access rules for protected members when they are not private. From what I have read so far, if a protected member is a type or class of a public or protected class, then public access is permitted. I have read that if a protected member is not accessed directly within a class then it is visible and can be accessed. This is in fact the reason I wanted to write my own letterbox class. However, what if I do not access the protected members directly? For instance, say I do not want to access the various string members directly, but I want to use them as fields within a class for example. My guess is that the access permission is checked when the type is declared, but not the member variables. I am however, slightly confused as I would have thought that the possibility of a derived class access a protected member variable of a base class would check that directly. Would this involve some kind of type casting/type lookup in the constructor? A: No, the class is not instantiated yet, so the access is checked during declaration of the class not the instantiation. Q: Flex: How do I set the properties of an instance of a different class without having the setter methods I have a TextInput component which is used to save the data. I want to set the data properties of this component (like the placeholder text, etc) and save it on the remote server without having the setter methods which are defined in the class itself. How do I do this? I tried doing this, but I am getting this error: TypeError: Error #1009: Cannot access a property or method of a null object reference. Code: A: "this.data" is null. This is why you are getting an error because this refers to the object that is calling the setter. You can call setters from within the setters. So for example: protected var myData:Object; public function get data():Object { return myData; }
