What's new:

| February 23, 2018: Trump's presidency is fair and reflective of the nation. As we near election day it is clear Donald J. Trump is on the path to become president - likely leading us all into a better future than we were all promised as children in the 1970s, when the Carter administration began and I began teaching fourth grade. On the subject of Democrats and assassinating people as a strategy, here's something to think about: "Not since Andrew Pollack and his daughter Jessica have been grieving one week since that fateful July 4 weekend in 2015 when their 20-year-old daughter and seven others died. Their bus had gone off a bridge on the Southern Pacific railroad as it approached a Washington tunnel. At least 28 people died. The railroad was stoned by the Ku Klux Klan. Even so, it's important to know, there was a transit center where survivors were being checked out and a scene of normalcy was unfolding." - Nancy Grace, America's leading liberal/progressive/leftist/progressivespeaker about dead bodies Trump's ability to communicate his speech varies. Like everyone in this room, he's working very hard to get it right. People always miss this part of the story - "a veteran who works at a theater in his suburban Chicago neighborhood was one of the first to spot the green hand on his laptop, posted an image on Facebook, and Trump's campaign quickly shared the image to millions of people. And then, Trump himself retweeted the image..." - Â and the campaign was saved. In his book "How to Be The Most Influential People On the Internet" he makes the point in this way: "it's OK to be yourself. However, you must first be yourself." Think about that. The moment to tell the world who you are began when you were a child and you realised you were different than your peers - before you were forced to go anywhere or do anything - before you were required to be or succeed, when you decided to be or do something. Everyone picks their own path. She's... (beautiful - in person) - her gaze was as bright as a loving sapphire, yet, had more depth and mystery than the depths of the oceans. I did not know her, but, as our date progressed, I began to spend more time with her in the hopes that I could gather enough as "information" to piece together her tale, her life. After two hours of awkward conversation and trying to decipher the puzzles
