Q: How to call a Function from jQuery when its AutoCompleteFilter I want to call a function after the AutoCompleteFilter of jquery has set the results based on a list I choose from. Any help is appreciated. I have a list of People and each person has a Name and a PhoneNumber. I want to use jQuery to search for that list and set the PhoneNumber of the person listed after I have searched for that Person. A: By leveraging the autoComplete feature, you will not be setting the PhoneNumber property of the selected item in the list, but you will be providing a callback function that will execute when the selected items changes. To implement that, you must execute the.autocomplete(source, fn) method after you made the selection. This jsFiddle illustrate it. function callback(event, ui) { alert("PhoneNumber: " + ui.value); } $(function() { $("#autocomplete").autocomplete({ source: ["ActionScript", "C", "C++", "ColdFusion", "Erlang", "Fortran", "Haskell", "Java", "JavaScript", "Lisp", "Perl", "PHP", "Python", "Ruby", "Scheme"], autoFocus: true, minLength: 2, select: function(event, ui) { callback(event, ui) $("#autocomplete").autocomplete("instance")._renderItem = function(ul, item) { return $("") .data("item.autocomplete", item) .append("" + item.label + "") .appendTo(ul

Approaches to the genetic analysis of human complex disease. Complex, multifactorial diseases are a major burden for health care worldwide. Over the past decade, studies of common and rare genetic variation in a variety of complex phenotypes have helped elucidate the genetic architecture underlying complex diseases, and identified many genes responsible for the common component. Gene expression studies have also identified many genes with small effects on disease susceptibility. The emerging picture for common disease is that it is due to multiple common variants with relatively small effect sizes, which combined with low prevalence in the population, produce little genetic signal. The apparent implausibility of many of the most common common variant hypotheses has stimulated interest in identifying rare variation as the primary source of variation for common disease. The cost of whole-exome sequencing approaches is prohibitive for routine clinical use, and hence single nucleotide polymorphism (SNP)-based approaches will continue to be developed. This review examines recent examples of SNP-based methodologies, based on analysis of common or rare variants in disease susceptibility .Nathan-clark-detained-in-creole-and-relocated-to-a-permanent-holding-facility.jpg A boy, 7 years old, is held by sheriff's deputies inside the Main Street Creole Convention Center after being arrested for trespassing during Saturday's protest over the police shooting of an unarmed black man in Ferguson, Mo., and having his car towed. (BRYNN LORELAN/STAFF) CLEVELAND, Ohio -- A toddler was handcuffed and arrested during Saturday's protests over the police shooting of an unarmed black man in Ferguson, Missouri, and authorities are proposing that a temporary holding center be built to house children who may have been detained. The arrest and detention of a 7-year-old came about an hour after the shooting death of Michael Brown, an unarmed black 18-year-old who was shot by police in Ferguson on August 9. Residents of Ferguson, a largely black, working-class suburb, have been protesting the police shooting since the Thursday night. The boy was arrested after a confrontation with police officers who asked him to leave an event at the Main Street Creole Convention Center in Cleveland. The boy's father and another man were arrested later. No charges have been filed, and the father and other man were released by late Monday. Organizers of the event, announced at a Ferguson protest last week, said they were trying to
