present invention relates to a semiconductor memory device, and more particularly to a method for forming a bit line contact in a dynamic random access memory (DRAM). A DRAM typically includes a plurality of memory cells, which may be arranged in a matrix of rows and columns. A DRAM cell comprises one capacitor and one transistor, which are electrically connected to the capacitor. When the DRAM cell capacitor is sufficiently large, a sufficient amount of electric charges can be accumulated in the capacitor, even though the capacitor is a small capacitor. The accumulated electric charges may be removed from the capacitor, thus resulting in the loss of the stored information. In order to prevent the loss of the information from the capacitor, a charge-storing node in the DRAM cell capacitor is usually connected to a semiconductor substrate through a connection node of a transistor, and thus called a trench capacitor. The transistor can be an NMOS or a PMOS transistor depending on the circuit for driving the DRAM. The DRAM cell capacitor is used to temporarily store bits of data, and a bit line is used to transmit the bit stored in the DRAM cell capacitor to an external portion. The bit line typically comprises a plurality of segments, each of which includes a contact section connecting between a transistor and a DRAM cell capacitor, and a wiring section extending from the contact section. There are various methods of forming the bit line contact, one of which is shown in FIGS. 1-3. FIGS. 1-3 are cross-sectional views showing steps for forming the bit line contact in a DRAM cell. Referring to FIGS. 1-3, a first insulating layer 13 is formed on a semiconductor substrate 11. A gate
