you a silky combination of a project management application, a daily scheduler, and an all-round organizer, that only saves your data locally.” In 2016, few software developers had the sheer audacity to ignore mobile productivity. Many of the leading design studios of the time, the kind that usually made desktop software a priority, rolled out a suite of smartphone apps that made it easy to do just about anything from the go. But those days are over. While laptops and desktop PCs remain desktop computers, smartphone and tablet usage has become mainstream. Today, you are just as likely to be using your smartphone as your main computing device. If you're not already using a productivity app, you should be. "Having separate applications for managing email, staying organized, taking notes, and scheduling your day has become a thing of the past," says James McGovern, CEO at Northronic Systems, makers of Everdo. "Not only do users need to adapt to this new reality, but they also need to take control of their productivity and build it into an essential tool.”

User Experience A Project Management App Project management apps are very useful and can be very useful. The idea of these tools is to aid you in better managing your project, or any workload at all. These type of apps typically give you a list of your projects, tasks, deadlines, and so on, while allowing you to tag, categorize, and manage them accordingly. Todo List You can also use these apps to track your tasks throughout the day, as well as make sure you don't forget about anything. Calendar The most obvious benefit of any of these apps is the part where you can create a calendar to do with your tasks, meetings, and, of course, your projects. Task Management These days, a great app is being able to plan, organize, and track the things you need to do. That way, you won't forget about what you need to get done, and you can stay on top of the things you need to do in your life.

Multi-Platform

Why stick to one type of tool when you can get everything on one app? Calendar, task management, and notes all in one place.
