It is a useful Windows software designed for .Threaded View Comet Performance So, I'm about to put in $5000 for my first "real" stage racing setup. Here is a true list of my needs: 1. New rear suspension/brakes2. New wheel setup (15's on front and 18's on rear)3. New fairing (I have a superbike)4. Cyclone front end (tried and HATED it)5. Boost controller (probably a FLEX2)6. New seat7. Transducer or better throttle As far as I can tell, I can get everything above from comet, although the wheels may be hard to find. From what I understand, the rest of the stuff will probably not be hard to find. I understand that the front fairing won't match my superbike, but I don't have enough money for a second bike, and my bike has less power (8th or 9th in the class). If I could get a road bike (without a fairing) for $500, I'd be fine with that. If anyone knows about doing this, I'd appreciate any advice. Who can I talk to, and where can I go to get this done? R34F 08-04-2009, 04:28 AM Comet actually uses VPP valves for their VES front suspension. Google will tell you. If you're putting $5000 on a bike you may be able to get the really nice tidy stuff, which does look better. If you just want to start racing, build your first bike around what you can afford. R34F 08-04-2009, 04:42 AM If you're going to go for the cheaper looking stuff, get some new red fairings at your local BMX shop, cut the ends off of an old tire, and mold it for the fairings. These are by far the cheapest. Why spend the money on wheels and brakes that other people won't be able to ride with? Sure you can always find a second bike and sell it later, but many of us like the idea of having the biggest and baddest
