it was found that the changes in the full width of the cracks with respect to the distance from the waterway were generally consistent with a power law relationship. this means that the full width w of the cracks was $w = bd$ where the exponent b is close to unity. this observation was generally consistent with the results of the distance-dependent displacement measurements of makis for a u_g of 1.6 m and l of 1000 m along a transect from a river bank of a small stream in japanese lowlands. in the case of large cracks/fissures, the value of b was close to 1.5 which is consistent with the b values reported in the literature. in contrast, the value of b was found to be less than unity in the case of small cracks/fissures. the b values were generally larger for cracks/fissures in the upper part of the study area (a) than those in the lower part (b) and in general the average values of the b values in the upper part were larger than those in the lower part. in the case of the upper part (a), the b values decreased with the increase in the lateral spreading distance from the waterway. this observation is consistent with the fact that the full widths of the cracks or cracks were larger than the distances between the banks at the smaller distances from the waterway. in the case of the lower part (b), the b values increased with the increase in the lateral spreading distance from the waterway. this observation is consistent with the fact that the full widths of the cracks or cracks were smaller than the distances between the banks at the larger distances from the waterway.

FULL ChrisTV 5.10 CRACK

in the high season, naohisa yoshikawa in charge of the creek management takes a break from his regular climbing duties to climb the generic crack solo. this route has a rating of 5.10c, and is commonly used for training purposes. the crack is located in a large crack just below the base of the first belay ledge, and is a 20 meter continuous roof with a large, overhanging top. these groups have been fighting for greater protections for lgbtqi+ people for years, and the success so far has been incredible. lgbtqi+ people deserve full legal equality and protection. when president obama signed his first executive order banning workplace discrimination against lgbtqi+ people, there were only 50 states where it was illegal for someone to be fired simply because of who they were. today, we have 69 states with laws protecting lgbtqi+ employees from discrimination, and states are moving even faster. every day more states are passing laws protecting lgbtqi+ people. the eo also protects transgender people from discrimination in federal facilities, so transgender people can use the bathroom in government buildings that matches their gender identity, and combat the vicious and persistent stigma transgender people face every day. today, when lgbt americans are denied employment, kicked out of a house, denied health care, or just treated differently, they are faced with one of two choices. they can give up, give in, or fight back. and now, they can know they have a place in this nation, where they are free to be who they are and to love the person they love. we are proud of the progress we have made, but our work is far from done. as the eo makes clear, it is the responsibility of every american to make sure our laws protect lgbtqi+ people, and the equality act of 2019 will do just that. it will strengthen existing protections, and ensure that people have the same fair and equal chance to get a job, to get a license, to get a loan, and to access public services as everyone else. and it will provide lasting protection from discrimination for all people, including people who are transgender or intersex. to ensure the equality act of 2019 is the law of the land, it will need to be passed by both houses of congress and signed into law by the president. the equality act is the most important civil rights legislation of our time. and it needs to happen now. i am proud that today the president will celebrate lgbtqi+ pride month and sign this historic executive order to ensure that every american can live their life free from discrimination. the equality act will ensure that we protect lgbtqi+ people from discrimination at work, at school, and in housing and credit markets. the president is taking bold actions to make sure all americans have a fair chance to be successful, and i want to thank the president and vice president for their support for this legislation. the president is committed to doing what is right and will not back down when it comes to supporting the rights of lgbtqi+ americans. that's why he is working with congress to pass the equality act of 2019 and why he will sign the executive order today. the equality act will protect all americans from discrimination in all areas of life, and we are proud of the progress made so far. thank you. the president. 5ec8ef588b
