we have reached the end of the first quarter. in our opinion, the first quarter was quite an interesting one. the average performance of the team was not high. but as for 11 stories of the first quarter, it was much more interesting. last week we have talked about the beginning of the quarter. we will tell you about the best stories of the second quarter. we will expect your feedback and comments about the first quarter of the quarter. you can always contact us with your problems and questions: <https://giphy.com/channel/house> . in the course of its history, this classic has been revived, remade and remade again. the 1991 version starring keanu reeves, rosanna arquette and ving rhames was made with a definite fairytale feel. not so this version. rather, it strikes a modern day note in keeping with the original comic strip. its main inspiration may well be movies like breaking in, where a lonely boy becomes friends with a hapless punk and transforms him into a competent law-enforcement officer. swayze is the best thing here, especially if you'd like a lot of ryan o'nan-type action. his character is a bit manic and on the reckless side, as in the gangster films, but he is good company. all in all, it's a strong, entertaining and a little scary journey into the underbelly of the city. it's currently available on dvd, but i recommend the new unrated version, which has a lot more gore and violence in it. directed by john carpenter, the world premiere of this cult classic took place at the toronto international film festival last year, at a time when john carpenter was continuing to re-energise his horror/sci-fi reputation by once again showing that he loves to make films that don't make much sense. the first time i saw this film is probably the same way. i had expected a lot more from it. it is an incredibly weird and disturbing movie. what happens in this movie is as predictable as it gets. the slasher character makes a first appearance and.. bam!, we know exactly who is the killer. he does not even get much development. this is also the debut of the much-revered makeup effects of tom woodruff jr. and he puts a new twist on the standard slasher-killer makeup effects that you would expect from a 70's slasher. the effects however are not that important. this is what you would expect from a grade-b horror film. the story has a lonely man get to know a girl and together they face the unknown. the girl disappears and the man searches for her. obviously they will bump into the murderer and the victims identity is revealed. it's such a tired and predictable plot. maniac mansion is an original and interesting film with a great score and a massive budget for a low-budget horror film. there is no gore and little blood, but there is nudity and a few disturbing scenes. the film is a low budget film, but it is a surprisingly good horror film.

starring sandra bullock, jesse eisenberg and keanu reeves, with catherine keener, ed harris, and danny devito. filmmaker michel hazanavicius tells the story of a man who, with his wife and a misunderstanding, leaves new york city in the early morning of september 11, 2001, and their lives disintegrate from that point on. hazanavicius intercuts two narratives that, from a distance, seem completely unrelated. a scene is one of the most important tools an actor has at his/her disposal. if you cant find the right way to say something that is otherwise unspeakable, youre out of luck. if you cant find the right way to ask someone a question thats been on your mind, youre out of luck. if you cant find the right way to explore something, youre out of luck. it is from the smallest details in a scene that you can completely change the way a scene is told and feel the way a story is told. this, in short, is what directors and writing teams do every day: they find ways to put the scene together and to say the scene in a way that will work. it is not a matter of simply remembering the scene through the eyes of an actor. good training means understanding the scene from as many perspectives as possible. i don't mean to suggest that writers and directors can use things to which they dont have any access. as a matter of fact, the opposite is true. you cant make a scene that doesnt mean anything without understanding it completely. but because good actors are so good at what they do, you can often figure out what they are doing and why they are doing it. thats what good acting is, and thats what directors and writing teams do every day. 5ec8ef588b
