quick update: ive spent a few weeks reading, learning and revising vocabulary for the test. my vocabulary has improved a lot, so im pretty confident i will pass it. im even going to take the jlpt n1 and n2 in december! today i was finally able to take the jlpt n1 in december. im not really prepared for it because i have not had enough time to prepare, so i would like to share with you a few tips i found on how to study for the test. probably the biggest problem for most japanese people is memorizing vocabulary. but if you think about it, everyone learns vocabulary, right? but not all people are able to remember the vocabulary they learned. so the best way to learn vocabulary is to learn the meaning of the word. also, not all vocabulary is useful. for instance, i do not need to learn the word giraffe unless i actually see a giraffe. so you need to learn words that are useful for you. most importantly, learn the words with a meaning that you have not learned before. greetings and welcome to the jlpt english listening practice test. this test covers the 2000 section of the japanese language proficiency test. there are 16 multiple-choice questions, and it is important that you pay attention to the time limit. there will be a 10-minute break after 30 questions, and once it is over, there will be no more questions. you will get 3 points for each correct answer, but you will lose 1 point for each incorrect answer. you will receive a score out of the total possible number of points after the test. it is important to study and plan carefully. the listening test will be divided into two parts: listening and reading. the reading section will consist of 10 questions, and you will have the same amount of time to answer them as you did for the listening section. if you have studied your kanji and vocabulary, you will be able to answer them very quickly. however, if you have not studied, then your time will be limited and you will need to make sure you have all the vocabulary and kanji memorized.
